Born and raised in Memphis, TN, Muck Sticky comes from a long line of musicians. His great-grandparents founded one of the first gospel bluegrass quartets in 1929 known as The Wayfaring Singers, and both of his grandfathers were well-known musicians. One was Gene Lowery of The Dixie Four who often recorded at Sun Studios, and sung backup for artists like Elvis Presley, Johnny Cash, Jerry Lee Lewis and Charlie Rich.

In the year 2000, with money he earned from various manual labor jobs, he bought an eight-track recorder and began creating what would eventually become his first album.

In January of 2001 he gave his first live performance at a battle of the bands concert where he won 2nd place. He began touring in 2002, and has developed one of the most entertaining live shows of any musical-comedy artist.

In 2017 he took a break from music to write, direct, and star in the award-winning indie film 'Dig That, Zeebo Newton', available on Amazon Prime.

Muck Sticky has appeared on/in The Tonight Show, Star Magazine, TMZ, TIME, High Times, The Hollywood Reporter, The LA Times, and dozens of well-known podcasts.
